When the first of these "new" religions appeared, they were not taken seriously. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, for example, was dismissed as a "cult" and "cultism" was defined as "a religious movement that is characterized by a charismatic leader, a belief in supernatural powers, and a focus on the leader's teachings." However, as the number of new religions grew, and as they began to attract more followers, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was no longer dismissed as a "cult" and "cultism" was no longer defined as "a religious movement that is characterized by a charismatic leader, a belief in supernatural powers, and a focus on the leader's teachings." Instead, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was recognized as a "religion" and "cultism" was defined as "a religious movement that is characterized by a charismatic leader, a belief in supernatural powers, and a focus on the leader's teachings."
